OCR ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

Assessment Method

Three examinations in Year 13 80%; Non Examined Assessment (coursework) 20%.

Why Should I Follow This Course?	What Teaching and Learning Methods Will Be Used?
If you enjoy reading a wide range of texts, not just	Learning will be achieved by attending lessons which will Literature, and would like to develop your knowledge	always involve lots of discussion to help you develop your and understanding of English Language, as well as	understanding and viewpoint. There are lots of your skills of analysis and creative writing, then this	opportunities for individual, group and whole class work course is a great option. We study an anthology of	as well as teacher led activities. You will also have written and spoken texts, a novel (The Great Gatsby),	individual tutorials with your teacher, for example when a collection of poetry (Duffy's Rapture)- and a play	planning coursework and you will also learn through the (Shakespeare's Othello), as well as a wide range of	use of online materials and technology. There will also be supplementary texts. We also aim to develop your	opportunities for you to deliver presentations to other writing skills in a creative context. English language	members of the group which will help you to improve and Literature is a popular course and for a good	your skills of communication and ICT skills. There is a reason! The course is varied, enjoyable and engaging	mature, fun ethos in the classroom environment.
and the skills you develop over the course will help you in any chosen career.
Because of the strong focus on critical analysis and interpretation, as well as the focus on developing writing skills, this course has an excellent record of helping students succeed within both higher education and the workplace.
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
What Will I Learn?	Where Will This Qualification Take Me?
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology,	The course will prove to be an asset should you wish to
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You	study any variety of subjects at university, for example:
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject,
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own coursework question. You also choose your own	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own genre of creative writing so you get to study and	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following a career in journalism, the media, the law, writing,
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own genre of creative writing so you get to study and produce texts that you genuinely enjoy while also	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following a career in journalism, the media, the law, writing, publishing or teaching. The course also has a cultural
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own genre of creative writing so you get to study and produce texts that you genuinely enjoy while also becoming independent!	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following a career in journalism, the media, the law, writing, publishing or teaching. The course also has a cultural value as we study texts from a range of different cultures
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own genre of creative writing so you get to study and produce texts that you genuinely enjoy while also becoming independent! You will learn techniques and technical terms	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following a career in journalism, the media, the law, writing, publishing or teaching. The course also has a cultural
During Year 12 you will begin studying the anthology, and start to get to grips with new terminology. You will also practice your creative writing skills and begin study of the novel and the poetry collection. Creative writing takes many forms and you will be introduced to a range of journalistic writing such as blogs and articles as well as fictional forms. In year 13 you will begin studying the play and undertake coursework which requires you to produce your own piece of creative writing and an analysis of two texts of your choice. This aspect of the course allows you to focus on your own particular areas of interest as you choose your own texts for study and your own genre of creative writing so you get to study and produce texts that you genuinely enjoy while also becoming independent!	study any variety of subjects at university, for example: Law, Journalism, Humanities and Education or specialist subjects such as Linguistics. This A Level is highly regarded by all universities and every year students who have studied this course go on to prestigious universities such as Warwick and Birmingham. If you are not thinking of doing a degree or you are looking beyond this, English Language and Literature can help you gain an apprenticeship or a career in a wide range of fields such as journalism, the police, politics, business and sales: the sky's the limit! All careers welcome English as a subject, which develops communication skills. It is a particularly useful subject to study if you have an interest in following a career in journalism, the media, the law, writing, publishing or teaching. The course also has a cultural value as we study texts from a range of different cultures